Since being dead can be used in the present and doesn't need a more complex tense like "have been" in order to make sense. If there is a preference to say "would have been", then you could say "would have been killed", since "killed" is an action which took place in the past, rather than the present. Next, to choose between . you'd be dead.

I can respect a Nurse who is obviously better than me and hits her blinks dead-on. But the auto aim after a blink is too forgiving in a lot of cases(and auto aim can be used against some killers, which I think is BS. It should aim for the survivor thats closest to the center of your vision, not the survivor who is closest to your main weapon).

I know not every killer should be looable, but... - Page ...
